

Implementation of public acceptance DTV broadcasts has been delayed for an inordinate amount of time. Transmitters have been on the air for over a year, but it is difficult to find an ATSC receiver because someone knows they may be made obsolete by copyright protection technology. Hence, they are rarely advertised or stocked in electronic stores.

I can see copyright protection for digital recording, but not for display.

I remember some years ago when Hollywood was panicked about home VHS and they proposed the only way you could rent a videotape was to have it locked in a rented player that would not rewind and would only play once! The very same people are in charge today.

Let's get on with DTV.

Donald Sinex, Chief Engineer KOCE-TV (Retired)